

A Cold Journey Home - February 8, 2018 - London, England

By Tom Allin

Stepping out of The National Gallery into the cold evening air of Trafalgar Square with Lord Nelson's back to the Gallery.

I wander in and then out of the train station.

It's getting chillier and darker.

Walking toward the underground.

Waiting for my ride home. Didn't mean to intrude upon the couple in front of the column.

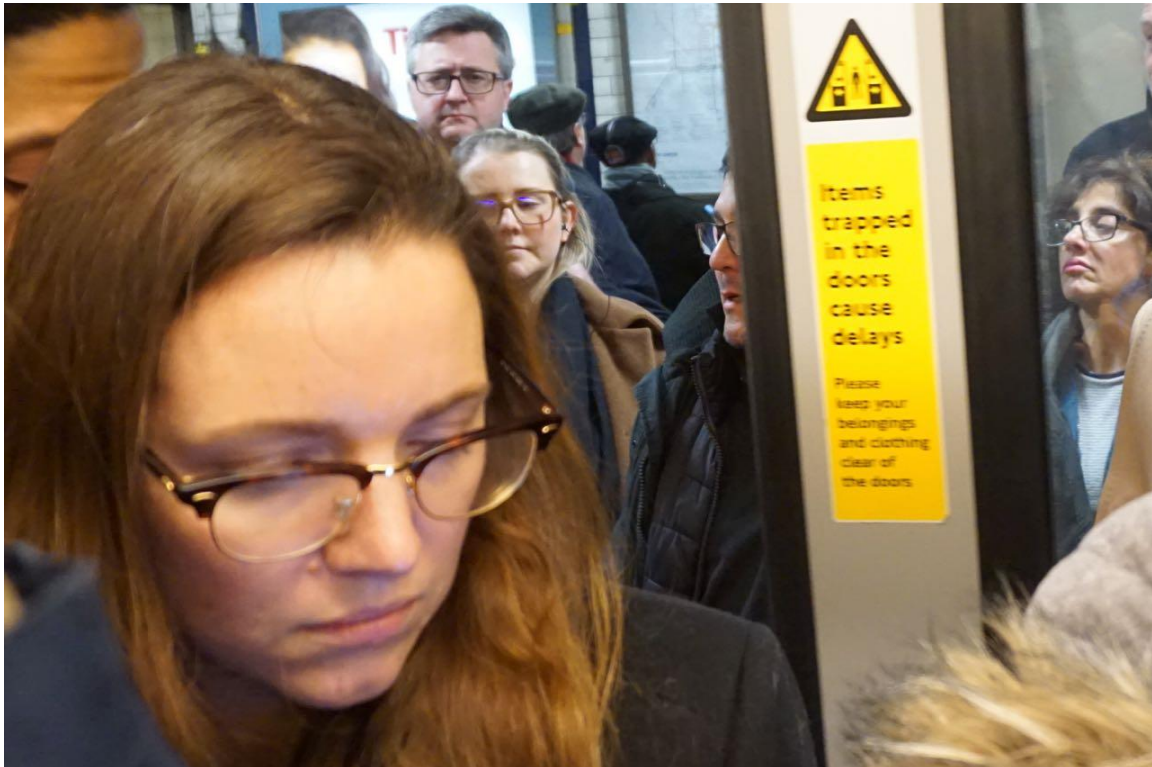

No seat for at least the beginning of my ride. Looking into the car from the station platform.

Beginning to get crowded but everyone is by themselves.

And more want on.

Maybe they can crowd onto the train.

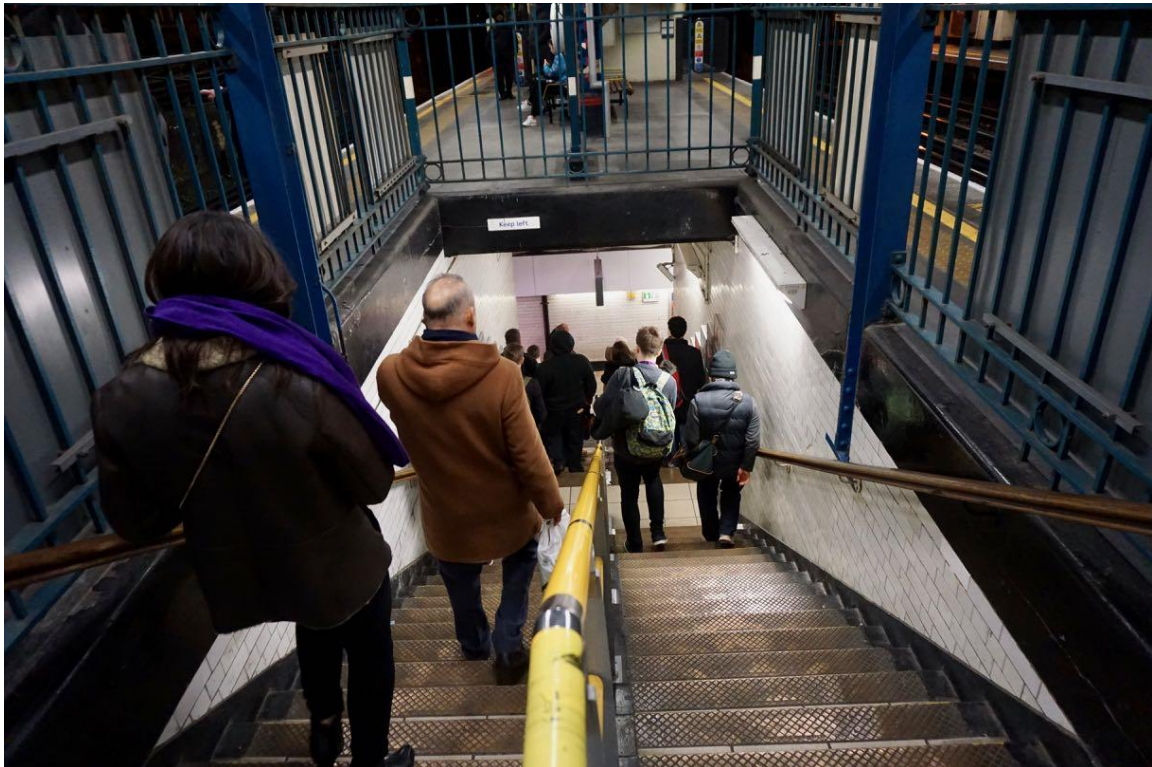

At least they have their own space.

If I get a seat I will pull out my Kindle Reader.

Out of the car and out the Turnham-Green underground station.

Only a ten minute walk to home, Oslo the Cat, and Nancy.

